The COMPLETE ORGAN WORKS of J. S. BACH

The W. T. BEST EDITION

(NEWLY REVISED BY DR. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL)

REVISER'S NOTE

Very much indeed has happened during the last two decades with regard to the ever-growing appreciation of Bach's works, and more particularly with regard to the dissemination of the actual Bach spirit and traditions. The works of Parry, Pirro, Spitta, Schweitzer, Heuss and others have contributed much to this end, and the old-fashioned lifeless style of rendering Bach which was so universally considered "comme il faut," is now rightly regarded as antiquated and false.

The more we learn about Bach, the more transcendent does his genius appear, and although his works allow endless variety in rendering there are certain things—some of which even the greatest masters of organ playing condoned—which are now rightly condemned as "un-Bach-like." These have been removed from the present edition. Registration schemes of a general character have been added, together with complete phrasing marks. Whilst it has been found impossible to attempt to reproduce Bach's registration, since our instruments are altogether differently constructed, and are even different in substance from the organs of his day, yet care has been taken not to admit anything which is against the principles of Bach's organ colouring so far as we know them. In several cases Bach's actual registration is given in the footnotes. The registration indicated has the great advantage over that of all the Continental Editions, in being designed with the English and American type of organ entirely in mind; a point of supreme importance to the player.

It is hoped that whilst the phrasing is sufficiently broad to avoid the fussiness of some modern editions—which by the way seem more suitable to chamber instruments of very quiet tone—such indications have been given as will prevent the works being lifeless and unintelligible both to executant and audience. Reference letters, which easily catch the eye have been inserted, thus showing convenient "halts" for the student when practising, and at the same time demonstrating at a glance the chief outlines of the form and construction of the piece. Each piece has also a terse but descriptive annotation of the style and history of the composition.

A. E. H.

The copyright annotations may be used freely for programme purposes, provided the number of the volume and piece in the AUGENER EDITION is stated.

The differences between the two versions are very marked in no less than 28 bars. The copy here given has interesting passages containing obvious distinctions as compared with the version found on page 863. A good many of these differences suggest the present to be the earlier version. The final Cadence, always a point of great interest in Bach's works, shows a collection of descending figures, whereas the closing bars of the other version display a number of ascending figures. Both of these terminations are built upon tonic pedals. The version here given has 62 as compared with 64 bars in the copy on page 863.

* This is probably an early version of the brilliant Fugue in D to be found in VOL. I page 28. Although the first 25 bars are identical, differences are to be noted in a large proportion of the succeeding measures, until the final pedal solo is reached, and the six bars containing this pedal sentence correspond with the same bars in the other and usually played version. In the variant there are 98 bars; in the copy on page 28, VOL. I the measures number 137. The differences to be found are for the most part very interesting, as well illustrating the evolutionary processes of development in music.
